Community Nursing is a field of nursing that is a combination of primary health care and nursing practice with public health nursing. The community health nurse organizes a constant and complete practice that is precautionary, therapeutic, and rehabilitative. The idea of care is centred on the principle that care addressed to the individual, the family, and the group contributes to the health care of the inhabitants as a whole.

Many nurses work with patients from the communities encompassing the health care facility. This implies that, all nurses deal with public health. However, Community health nurses work more precisely in this area, striving to enhance the health of the public and instruct the community on health issues that are widespread in the area. Numerous public health nurses work with particular populations, such as, children's living in the poverty.
